the Police Department has adopted since Gen, Bingham became Commissioner. But don't be misled. He was held on a charge of burglary. His arrest resulted looks more like a dead child than a from his carelessness in wearing the living one."

Roos is one of the new generation of sleuths. He knows what's what. So when he saw Le Paige walking over Ninety-seventh street with a broad space of white shirt, framed is silken to be substituted in the substitute of the new method under the Bingham regulations:

"Beg pardon, sir, but don't you think it improper to wear evening dives at this time in the day?"

Le Paige said he had been invited to a dinner and wanted to spend the afternoon at his club without going them again to dress. Roos contended that even this exigency did not affect the matter of attire.

They argued as gentlemen and then Roos said he could take Le Paige to a referee. They went to the East One Hundred and Fourth street station and appealed to Capt. Tappen. He turn-them over to Inspector Walsh, who was at his desk.

Referred to the General.

Referred to the General.

Referred to the General.

"I'm not an absolute judge," said Walsh, "but if you gentlemen want a decision from which there can be no appeal go to headquarters and see the Commish—beg pardon, I mean Gen-Bingham. His experience at the White House makes him unassailable as an arbiter of such things."

And so Roos and Le Paige went to Mulberry street. M. Henri Garde had been notified and he hurried down to see if the much-discussed evening clothes belonged to him. At beadquarters Capt. McCauley, of the Detective Bureau, recognized Le Paige as a subject of a Rogues' Gallery portrait. All this while he had wandered about with Roos without being under arrest. When Garde appeared and declared that not only the suit but the light rain coat, were his Le Paige grew indigmant. He would not tell his present address and he is held until to-morrow. Meanwhile he wears the dress suit morning, noon and night in his cell.

"They Runned Me Out."

The child fell upon' the steak with her hands. She ate every particle of it. Then she devoured the fried potatoes; the milk, coffee and ple followed. Then she devoured the fried potatoes; the will, coffee and ple followed. Then when the milk, coffee and ple followed. Then the milk, coffee and ple followed.

Elizabeth Bumps a Freight Car Barge and Two Sister Boats in the Fog.

A collision that came near being serious occurred out in the East rive early this forenoon. The ferry-boat Elizabeth, of the Centrai Railroad of New Jersey, was nosing her way through the mist when, with-out warning, she smashed into a lighter with freignt cars from the Morgan with freight cars from the Morgan street dock. For a moment it looked as if the cars would be dumped everboard. The lighter slowly recovered, however, and sheered off. The ferry-boat was running very slowly at the time otherwise the accident would have been serious.

running very slowly at the time otherwise the accident would have been serious.

Another crash occurred when the New Brunswick, of the Pennsylvania ferry line, ran into the Anchor line pier near Twenty-third street. The New Brunswick had been tacking back and forth for half an hour in vain attempts to find her dock at Twenty-third street. She put in at length, but the fog made at impossible to calculate distances. The craft was carried out of her ccurse by the tale and crashed into the other offer. The shock threw the passengers from their feet. Many were bruised and that in the rush which followed.

The ill luck of the Elizabeth continued to-day when she collided with two of her slater craft of the same line within an hour. She had just left her pier in Jarsey City when she jammed into the Plainfield, coming in. A part of the Elizabeth's rail was smashed and nearly every window on the port side was broken. The passengers tried to rush to the rail and get to the other boat, but the crew held them back until quiet could be restored. The gates were bent out by the rush. The boat made a couple of, trips and was attempting to gain ther Liberty street slip when the Lakewood came ploughing out of the fog. Both captains saw the danger at the same time and signalled to reverse. Though the boats succeeded in stopping most of their headway, there was a splintering and a shock as they came together. The damage was elight.

WORE A DRESS SUIT "RUNNED OUT," SAYS LITTLE GIRL WAIF FOUND STARVING

Wise Sleuth Under Gen. Bing- Famished Child of Ten Years Picked Up in Harlem Tells Pitiful Tale to Police Who Discover Her.

Upshot Is that Le Paige, Who Violated Social Rules Is Accused of Burglary.

Because he wore a "dress suit" before 6 o'clock P. M. William Le Paige, twenty-three years old, was to-day held in $500 for further examination by Magistrate Crane in the Harlem Court.

William was the first victim of the higher ideal in masters sartorial that the Police Department has adopted since Gen. Bingham became Commissioner.

Foliceman Kilroy, of the East One Hundred and Twenty-sixth Street Station, was at One Hundred and Twenty-seventh street and second avenue early to-day when a form that seemed almost ground, open-eyed and marveiling around, open-eyed and in a hell was.

"I'm Ida Van Nantelberg," she began. "I'm ten years old and I live somewhere. My mamma doesn't love me; neither does my papa. They runned me out—such a long time ago. They just told me to 'git!' and I got. I been sleepin' in the hallways ever since, and I ate nothin' since."

The policeman started up the dark hallway when a negro approached him. "There is a starving child around the Police Department has adopted since Gen. Bingham became Commissioner."

When lder was no more to eat, and while the policemen were still stand-ing around, open-eyed and marveiling around, open-eyed and still the child ate.

When there was no more to eat, and while the policemen set state the figure was clad as a girl. He foliowed after the figure was clad as a girl. He foliowed after the figure and came upon it as it disappears the repetition of the second of the second in the policemen set of the policemen got the carry second in the child ate.
